The Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department (LASD) in collaboration with Special Service for Groups (SSG) is the largest sheriff's department in the United States responsible for managing and securing approximately 19,000 inmates in eight custody facilities. LASD is proposing to address the high recidivism rate of mentally ill offenders by expanding current mental health and support services available to inmates prior to their transition back to the community. LASD and SSG will also expand services available to provide comprehensive jail in-reach therapeutic services and individualized discharge planning to supplement the existing in-jail services. |
| CA    | Marin County Department of Health and Human Services       | Suburban          | West      | Implementation/Expansion | STAR Program (Support and Treatment After Release)  | Adult                            | Marin County Jail                                   | Marin County Department of Mental Health Services        | Corrections                          | Diane Slager                 | The STAR program began in Marin County in 2001 and focused on incarcerated offenders with serious mental illnesses. The program's key components are: small caseloads, team approach, multi-disciplinary treatment, integrated case management and crisis services, and continuation of care after release. The STAR program will expand its capacity to 1) conduct jail-based assessment, planning and engagement; 2) initial case management; and 3) integrated substance abuse services.  |

The new coordinator will work with 40 women post-release over 2 year period.   |
| KY | Kentucky Administrative Office of the Court | Rural/Urban    | Southeast | Planning/Implementation  | Plan and Implement a Juvenile Drug Court in Jefferson County, Kentucky | Juvenile    | Administrative Office of the Courts (focused on Jefferson County)  | Seven Counties Services, Inc. (several other supplemental MH providers)  | Pre-trial and post-conviction diversion | Carole Henderson   | The Kentucky Administrative Office of the Court will utilize funding to eliminate the duplication, interruption, and fragmentation of the system of care services for youth with mental illness and/or co-occurring disorders. It will serve a minimum of thirty (30) youth the first year and then up to forty-five (45) youth in each subsequent year. It will also include the development of a 'one front door' entry system for youth to access mental health and substance abuse treatment services, through the Louisville Adolescent Network for Substance Abuse & Co-Occurring Treatment (LANACAT) network. The project will also adopt a framework similar to a mental health court or a juvenile drug court to facilitate the coordination of treatment services across the agencies, and to promote the needed accountability for both the youth being served and the agencies providing the services. |

The New York City Office of the Criminal Justice Coordinator and the New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene, in collaboration with mental health agencies in New York City and State and the Center for Court Innovation, will provide hundreds of mentally-ill misdemeanants and those with co-occurring disorders with treatment and transitional services. This initiative will test the extent to which a large number of offenders with serious mental health problems can be encouraged to voluntarily seek long-term services when there is limited legal leverage available to compel them to seek treatment. The project will provide the courts of the Bronx criminal division with the tools to provide 12,000 misdemeanants coming through the court with post-disposition screening for mental illness. Participants who are identified as having potential mental health issues will receive assessment, counseling, treatment readiness classes, and case management combined with links to services for voluntary engagement. |

Both are emerging as best practices across the country and in the State of Texas. A structured consensus building process called Interest-Based Negotiation (IBN) will be used to design the plan. Interest-Based Negotiation (IBN) is a process in which an impartial third party uses a combination of facilitation, mediation and organizational development methods to assist in constructive resolution problems. The value of this process is that it allows entities with widely varied interests to balance and evaluate those interests to arrive at agreed upon solutions to mutual problems.          |

The initiative will build upon and expand existing programs and services available to approximately 30 aftercare youth during the grant period. Participants will have access to wraparound clinical, crisis, and other types of support services. In addition, reach-in services to help plan for aftercare and provide support to identified youth and their families will be provided by community based organizations while the youth are incarcerated. |
